

Andrea Falcon (Montreal): Body, Natural Body, and Living Body in Aristotle's Natural Philosophy

Abstract

Many, if not most, philosophers working in the Aristotelian tradition have identified the object of Aristotle's natural philosophy (also known as Aristotle's natural science and Aristotle's physics) with natural bodies and the properties of natural bodies. I will offer a re-evaluation of this interpretation and a reflection on its philosophical significance.